Ignorance is the Problem.....Knowledge is the Solution

High-conflict divorce disproportionately congests the family law system with continual litigation and is intractable to mental health therapy. Resolving parents' continual conflict over child custody can be one of the most challenging decisions for the court system, and can entangle the child into the inter-spousal conflict of the parents by making the child a "custody prize" to be won in their inter-spousal conflict.

Efforts toward solution have had only limited success as evidenced by unsolved family conflicts and the continuing burden placed on the family court system by high-conflict divorce cases. The psychological pressure being placed on the child by one parent to create the child's rejection of the other parent has received the label of "parental alienation" in the popular culture.
